The reader might ascribe all this uneasiness to want of knowledge of the country and of a just confidence in its people. But the truth is, the better a man knows that country the more cautious he is. To it, in most of its moods and ways, is the spirit of the poet's remark appli-

" Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

In addition to the above properly defensive measures we made some little quiet parade of our rifles and pistols, of which we had pretty good store, letting the numerous lounging Grisos and the family see that if we were trifled with there might be some risk involved in it.

After all our dispositions had been made, the lady of the house began to place our ordered supper on the table. During this procedure I laid down on the banquette, for I was far from feeling or being well. Had the supper been the simplest in the world to be worthy of the name, I should not have demurred openly or mentally. but as it was, my poor sick stomach underwent torture from the time the viands appeared till we left the town; nay, for weeks afterwards that supper lay undigested in my memory. One only thing, save the chile, could I get along with, that was the eggs; they were stomachable themselves, for I knew that none of the in themselves, for I knew that none of the mixed and multiplied odors from garlic, goats' meat, onions, sour meal, sour milk, and the whole terra incognita of the New Mexican cuisine, could get through their shells. So having some bread with us which I toasted and boiled some of the black tea which I had had the precaution to buy in Santa Fe, I did very well as to my own eating.

But the table was loaded with dishes so odo

rific to the nose, and so nauseously oleaginous to my weak stomach, that a constant rebellion was going on there. One dish looked like a mass of small worms stewed in yellow oil; another wore the semblance of the same worms fried brown; a third would be sodden flesh of the goat or kid alone; a fourth, the same smothered with a batter of red pepper, and possibly garlic and onions interspersed. There were other fries and stews, but oh! I tried the gravy of one of them, as being perhaps possible to get down as it was, and again, oh! how long before its hold was lost upon me.

My companions, who were in high health, seeing my inability to eat, and being, as they seeing my inability to eat, and being, as they afterwards confessed, nearly as nauseated at the supper as myself—for but for a strong pull of aguardiente, they could not have kept it down—helped themselves through the ceremony by taunting me with the excellence of the viands, and otherwise pretending to a wonder-ful gusto. It was too had of them, considering my valetudinarian condition, but they did it in nearly pure solf-defence.

nate was the moment when these deli-Fortunate was the moment when these delicacies were removed. The next morning I took it into my head to make an excuse for an irruption into the cocina where our breakfast was preparing. It was nasty almost beyond belief. I was hungry from my thin feeding of the previous day, and resolved to have a hand at cooking myself. So by the assistance of our hostess's brother, who spoke tolerable English, I got me some onion-broth made of my own I got me some onion-broth made of my own bread, which suited me very well, especially as I knew its history. My companions I left pretty much to fate, for they deserved none of y commiseration. Breakfast over, mules hitched in, and bills paid, we cracked whip and started, with a loud and hearty A Dios, Algadones! The gaping Grisos who stood by seemed to partake of our obvious satisfaction, for they all cachinnated, and seemed to think it quite good wit. Wit or it was most cordially uttered.

At a distance it looks like one of those vast old-fashioned country hotels, complete at all points, which the traveller in Pennsylvania is enough conversant with. Our stay with Don Juan (pronounced Don Whan) was something more than half an hour, and as the morning was cold and frosty, his sound wine helped us merrily along the remainder of the way.

At Bernalillo the Sandia mountain, which seemed to us impossible to get away from, is yet more imminent than at Algadones, and is dly picturesque. Its top was crowned mountain pine, like clots of frizzled hair on a w. "Republics are ungrateful."-The apointment of Military Storekeeper for California, which was conferred upon Major James M. McRea by the Secretary of War, and resigned by Major McRea after his bonds, in the sum of $15,000, had been approved and accepted, because he felt that the appointment was not acceptable to President Fillmore, has been or is to be conferred, we are informed, upon Mr. Baldwin, of Virginia, the brother-in-law of Mr. Secretary Stuart.

We know Major McRea well; and if there is single member of this Administration who has done more for the Whig party, written more, spoken more or better to the masses, spent more money in electioneering, risked his life oftener, or been of more valuable service to Millard Fillmore when and where Millard Fillmore needed friends of nerve and enthusiasm than the aforesaid James M. McRea, then we should like to have him, whoever he may be, pointed out. We voluntarily pay this tribute to the sterling worth of Major McRea, and ask his forgiveness if we have thereby offended.

CHARITY !- This, it is said, should begin at ome. If so, the editor of the Steubenville Herald has but a weak dilution of it to send abroad. He says, in a dubious way, that his friend, the Hon. Or how dare he intimate that any member of Congress cares for the eight dollars per day? Shameful!

To the Editors of the American Tele GENTLEMEN: As the mover of the bill which has just been indefinitely postponed by a ma-jority of one in the Board of Common Council entitled "An act supplementary to an act enti-tled 'An act laying a tax on shops, porter-cel-lars and confectioneries, and increasing the tax on ordinaries, retailers, and theatrical amusements," in view of the interest which the subject seems to have elicited in this community, I ask a small space in your columns,

Were I personally concerned, and my own private character involved, you and your readers would not be troubled by any word of mine. In that respect I know how to take care of my-self, without making a parade before those who care nothing about the matter. But here we have a great public question—a subject which should interest every man, woman, and child in the community. Who, and what may be the character of the mover of the bill, is a point, comparatively speaking, of but small importance. The merits and demerits of the plan alone concern the public; and with those, with your kind leave, I will briefly deal. And ever this intrusion on you and your readers I would not venture upon, were it not for the intrinsic interest of the subject. Let that plead my ex-

Can we, or can we not, by legislative enactment, control, regulate, and modify the use, or rather the abuse, of ardent spirits? That is the question, and to solve it my bill was addressed. And here let me say, in advance, that I respect an honest difference on this subject, and claim no superior and more honorable ground than those with whom I have the misfortune to differ. I am not wedded to my own particular scheme, but frankly am willing to adopt any other, better calculated to work out the desired end, which any of my fellow members, or any citizen, may hoose to present.

I may be allowed, however, with proper re spect to the opinions of others, and a perfect willingness to take anything better, to express the decided and honest conviction that the bill, as I originally presented it, as a compendium of my views, was and is the best suited, of any plan so far presented, to bring a cure to the disease, and improve the moral and physical condition of our people.

Our readers will see what that bill is by reference to the proceedings of the Board of Com-mon Council, as published in your columns. By that bill I mean to stand or fall. If it be good and fitted to the end, then I claim approval. If bad, let the public visit me with their censure. I am prepared for either, strong in the appro-bation, allow me to say modestly and fear-lessly, of good motives and an approving con-science. If I have erred, it is an error of the head, not of the heart. If the evil admits not of cure, then, as a citizen, and one born in this District and identified with its interests, I grieve and despair. But, thank God! despair is no word to be admitted in a case like this. If I fail now, better and more able men will try and succeed hereafter. In the march of reform and improvement, progress is not by fits and starts, but, to be genuine and true, must be steady though slow. It may be, gentlemen, that I have mistaken my time and men. It may be that I expose myself to the nickname of "Fan-atic," and ain, by being in advance, as my op-ponents say, of public opinion.

Be it so, if they will. But I cannot see the fountains of vice and wickedness opened in our community, without raising my feeble voice, community, without raising my feeble voice, and recording my poor vote to check or prevent the moral evil that so afflicts us. Well aware of the peril and responsibility of the crusade, and that better and wiser men than myself have failed, I entered upon the enterprise with good motives, a good end, and a firm resolve that, be the consequences what they may for me personally, the work shall go on as long as I have a hand to wield a pen, a voice to plead the cause, or a vote to secure the triumph of right. In this, my effort to do good, I have acted and still act on my own responsibility. In its purstill act on my own responsibility. In its pur-suit I know neither fear nor favor. No Fanatic, whether he be ultra, for or against, finds any friend in me. I seek neither to please nor dis please. I act, and shall continue to act, under a strong sense of duty; and, whilst respecting the motives and arguments of those who differ with me, hope ever to preserve that firmness and hopefulness that heed not the temporary local and interested difficulties which always beset the road to right, but nerve us to appea from the heated partisan excitement of the present to the cooler and truer verdict of the Algadones I thought to answer remarkately counsel in his suit for divorce, should it be tried future. I shall ask another column in your paper, not on my account, but for the goodness and interest of my cause. I shall then address myself to the details of the bill; and I remain. low-citizen, John Carro Washington, August 14, 1851. JOHN CARROLL BRENT.

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICS FAIR.—In accordance with resolutions hereto-fore adopted at a meeting of citizens upon this subject, the committee appointed by the mayor of Washington assembled yesterday evening in the City Hall. There was a free interchange of opinion, and much said to encourage the enterprise. Dr. Lee, in the agricultural de-partment of the Patent Office, and who for a number of years has been connected with the agricultural press, made many interesting statements, dwelling on the feasibility and the value of a fair of the character proposed. In the course of conversation we understood him to remark, that during the last year there had been distributed throughout the country, under his direction, upwards of one hundred thousand packages of different kinds of seed. Some of them, however, had lost their vitality; and hence the importance of a model farm, to test seed before they are sent abroad; and he was of the opinion that there will shortly be a model farm in our neighborhood for this purpose. In all other countries but our own there are societies for the importation of foreign fruits; and yet we have a wider range of climate than any one of them, and agriculture is our greatest interest. He believes that coffee and tea may be successfully cultivated in our southern climate. There are now upwards of three hundred agricultural societies in the Union, and these, it is probable, will all combine to make a demonstration here, at the seat of the General Government, sometime during the next
